RESOLVING CONFLICT PEACEFULLY

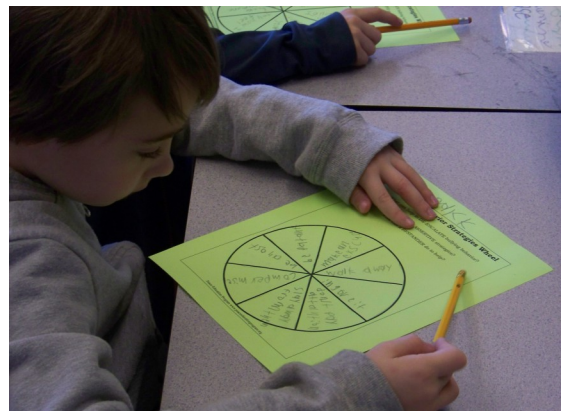

Peace Education Program has been conducting conflict resolution classroom visits for over a decade. A Peace Education Program Trainer conducts a series of four workshops in elementary, middle or high school classrooms. These sessions allow students to explore their own experience with conflict and brainstorm nonviolent techniques for solving problems.

Workshop topics include communication skill building, feelings identification, anger cues and triggers and conflict de-escalation techniques. Students play cooperative games, develop role plays and brainstorm ideas for problem solving.

Classroom conflict resolution workshops give a class, or a grade, or even an entire school population, a common language for discussing conflict and the skills to resolve it.

Students at Bloom Elementary brainstorm strategies for de-escalating conflict.

Stonestreet Elementary students participate in Down Up Listening, an activity designed to highlight active listening.
